Stress Test Consent Form

In order to estimate how well my heart, lungs and blood vessels perform, I hereby voluntarily consent to perform a special exercise test. I understand that my history will be reviewed in order to find any conditions that would make this test unusually hazardous for me. During the test I will walk on a treadmill with the speed and incline increasing every few minutes, or if unable to walk sufficiently, will receive a drug to increase the blood flow to my heart. The test may stop if observations suggest it is unnecessary or unwise to continue. During the test, my blood pressure and electrocardiogram will be taken.

The risk in performing this test or any stress test include irregular, rapid heart beats, large changes in blood pressure, chest pain or pressure, or at the highest of risks, a possible ischemic event such as stroke, embolus or heart attack. However, the checkups before the test, close supervision during the test, and treatment immediately available in the room are all part of the safeguards built into the test procedure and reduce the risk of those events occurring.

My benefits from taking this test come from knowing about how much I can do with reasonable safety, what kinds of treatment might help me, and in general, what my future prospects are. My right to withdraw from the test at any time is protected. My welfare is protected by the close supervision before and during the test, and the availability of emergency treatment if necessary.
